--- The Middle East Peace Update Report ---

((((PRAISE THE LORD ALL HIS PEOPLE!)))

Today's Date: October 13, 2010

Issue: "URGENT"

John 14:27; Peace I leave with you, My peace I give to you; not as the world gives do I give to you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

Hi !

There are two items of interest that I had to report on!

The Miracle in Chile:

The miners in Chile that were freed from there 2,000 foot below earth's prison have seen first hand the grace of Almighty God at work first hand! It looks like God used this experience to highlight to the miners and the world just how loving, kind, merciful and powerful He is. The Lord worked through the common goal of men, to save men they didn't know from certain death. God is still in the miracle business and boy did He prove it today! I rejoice in God's love and Awesome Power on behalf of the miners and their families. What a lesson we all can learn, when people put their trust in God and work together, awesome results will occur. I loved how the people of Chile thanked God openly and proudly for His help as well. God is good.

The War of Armageddon Players Take Center Stage:

We have been reporting on this for years. We have warned that China would flex it's might in the Middle East and today they did in a HUGE way.

[Please read the attached PDF file!!!]

China for the first time in known history flew it's fighter jets into Turkey and Iran. Oh, yes the trinity in the ME, Syria, Turkey and Iran are tightly aligned with China. Now I find it interesting that the U.S. and Israel reported that they were caught off guard by this. I wasn't and any Bible Believing Believer should not have been either. My friends this signals the Ezekiel and Revelation alliances that the Bible has foretold. The powers that will invade Israel in the Book of Ezekiel and Revelation are firmly in place. All that is needed now is for God to say to the red horse (war) of revelation, ride and the Tribulation will ensue.

Amazing, amazing times we're witnessing together !

Don't forget to look at the PDF's attached to this report...

Keep Looking , the Lord's Return is at hand!

Then those who feared the Lord spoke to one another, And the Lord listened and heard them; So a book of remembrance was written before Him For those who fear the Lord And who meditate on His name. AMEN!

Chinese warplanes make Mid East debut in Turkey and Iran

Chinese Su-27 warplane

The arrival of a new Middle East player startled Washington and Jerusalem: DEBKAFfile's military sources disclose that when Turkish Prime Minister Taysyip Erdogan met Syrian president Bashar Assad in Damascus Monday, Oct. 11, they talked less about the Kurdish question and more about the role China is willing to play in the military-intelligence alliance binding Syria, Iran and Turkey.

Erdogan took the credit for China's unfolding involvement in the alliance in the role of big-power backer. Two recent events illustrate Beijing's intent:

1. From Sept. 20 to Oct. 6, the Turkish Air Force conducted its regular annual Anatolian Eagle exercise, this time without US and Israeli participation. Israel was not invited and America opted out. However, their place was taken by Chinese Sukhoi Su-27 and Mig-29 warplanes making their first appearance in Turkish skies.

Our military sources report that the Chinese warplanes began touching down at the big Konya air base in central Turkey in mid-September for their debut performance in the Middle East and Europe.

Konya has served NATO and the United States for decades as one of their most important air bases.

2. Our sources add that the Chinese planes refueled only once on their journey to Turkey in... Iran. When they touched down at the Gayem al-Mohammad air base in central Iran, their crews were made welcome by the Iranian air force commander Gen. Ahmad Migani.

It was the first time Chinese fighter-bombers are known to have visited the Islamic Republic.

The Gayem al-Mohammed facility, located near the town of Birjand in South Khorasan, is situated directly opposite the big American base of East Afghanistan near the Afghan-Iranian border town of Herat.

The Turkish prime minister painted the military alliance binding Tehran, Ankara and Damascus in rosy colors for Assad's benefit as more central to the region and more powerful than Israel's armed forces after overcoming the IDF's military edge.

Israel releases 1973 war papers to warn Syria

DEBKAfile Exclusive Report October 6, 2010, 10:42 AM (GMT+02:00)

Bashar Assad lays ground for Hizballah coup in Beirut

Israel's Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu and Defense Minister Ehud Barak decided to release the minutes of the deliberations on an air blitz against Damascus - held in Jerusalem before and during the Yom Kippur War 37 years ago - as a strong warning to Syrian President Bashar Assad, DEBKAfile's military and intelligence sources reveal. Then, a decision to take out Damascus to halt the Syrian offensive was overruled. This time could be different: Bashar Assad regime's own centers of power could be at risk if Syria and Hizballah go through with their plan to overpower Beirut and topple Saad Hariri's sovereign government.

That is the message relayed by the October 1973 war papers released this week, which go beyond uncovering secret operational and intelligence decision-making and are unusually wide-ranging.

In the hours leading up to the fateful moment on Oct. 6 1973, when the combined forces of Egypt and Syria caught Israel napping by a joint offensive (designed by their Russian sponsor), Israel's chief of staff, the late Lt. Gen. David Elazar, said to Prime Minister Golda Meir: In operational terms, we can wipe out the entire Syrian air force by 12:00 noon today. We need another 30 hours to destroy its missiles. Then, if they go on the offensive at 5 pm., our air force will be free to strike the Syrian army. To me, this is operational option is attractive.

Three days later, on Oct. 9, catastrophe stared Israel in the face: The IDF was in a bad way and taking casualties in the realm of hundreds dead and thousands injured; their defense lines in Sinai and the Golan had fallen and there was nothing in the way of the Syrian army going all the way to the Sea of Galilee and Tiberias.

In a closed meeting with Golda Meir, the iconic defense minister Moshe Dayan asked for permission to bomb Damascus. "Inside the city?" she asked. "Inside the city and its environs," he replied. "We have to break the Syrians," Dayan explained that he proposed to strike the Syrian General Command and infrastructure in Damascus. "We've done enough going around the fields (a reference to targets outside the Syrian capital). There are no more key targets left. Damascus is the only one. We can't promise the population won't be hurt."

Golda's permission was withheld.

DEBKAfile's sources report that the decision to release these documents and the section relating to Syria was taken in Jerusalem after the Obama administration failed to prevent the two-day state visit to Lebanon by Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad taking place on Oct. 13.

US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton may not have been tough enough on this issue when she met Syrian foreign minister Walid Muallem in New York Monday, Sept. 27. Damascus also inferred from the tenor of that conversation that Washington would not interfere with a Syrian-Iranian-backed Hizballah attack on Lebanon's centers of power.

The 1973 war papers released in Jerusalem, revealing that Israel then was just hours away from an air blitz against Damascus, was a message to Assad that Jerusalem was not aligned with the Americans in this.

The suspense ahead of the Ahmadinejad visit and its fallout continued to rise this week.

Tuesday, Oct. 5, U.S. sources told Kuwait's Al-Rai newspaper: There are international and Arab concerns over a potential assassination attempt against PM Saad Hariri.

That night, Damascus pressed ahead with its campaign to prepare Beirut for a Hizballah takeover by chipping away at Lebanese sovereignty and the authority of the Hariri government. Syria's chief military prosecutor issued summonses for four former Lebanese security officials to present themselves in Damascus and testify against three former officers, two Syrian and one Lebanese, who bore witness against Syria and Hizballah as complicit in the assassination of former Lebanese prime minister Rafiq Hariri in 2005. This step followed the publication on Monday of a list of 33 Lebanese and international figures accused of conspiring in a plot to inculpate Syria for the murder.

Iran Admits It Could Pull Nuke Trigger on US, Israel

Tuesday, October 5, 2010 12:11 PM

By: Ken Timmerman

For the first time since the expansion of Iran's nuclear program was exposed in 2002, the Iranian government is dropping the pretense that it is developing nuclear technology purely for peaceful purposes. Iran has developed nuclear war plans to deter U.S. and Israeli aggression and retaliate against it, a top adviser to Defense Minister Ahmad Vahidi announced in a strategic analysis.

Defense Ministry analyst Alireza Saeidabadi's detailed analysis, published last week on a website that Iran's intelligence ministry runs, examines several scenarios in which Iran could become embroiled in a shooting war with the United States or Israel.

One of the scenarios Iranian military planners must consider is a strategic nuclear U.S. strike on Iran, he writes. If that occurred, Iranian planning documents call for attacks against U.S. interests "on the world stage," his analysis says.

The Iranian military should "prioritize its air force and ballistic missile fleet" in dealing with a conventional attack from Israel, Saeidabadi writes.

But in the event Israel uses unconventional weapons against Iran, "then Iran should employ a nuclear strategy."

Similarly, if Iran and the United States get engaged in naval clashes in the Persian Gulf, Iran should "use its sea power for hit-and-run attacks, commando attacks, and use anti-shipping missiles" against U.S. naval vessels.

"But if the United States launches an unconventional attack, Iran needs to respond with a nuclear strategy," the Iranian defense ministry analyst contends.

The meaning is clear to former Revolutionary Guards officer Reza Kahlili. "He means that Iran should be prepared with the capability of nuclear weapons to respond" if an enemy were to launch a nuclear strike against Iran, says Kahlili, author of a recent memoir, "A Time to Betray."

"The use of nuclear technology for peaceful means is just a front," Kahlili told Newsmax. "They are prepared to go to war and will not give up the bomb project, which they feel is very close to being able to arm their ballistic missiles with nuclear war heads."

This is the first time that a senior Iranian government official has made an authorized public statement acknowledging that Iran has developed the military doctrine needed to employ nuclear weapons on the battlefield.

Although both President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad and Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei insist that Iran has the right to enrich uranium and to develop nuclear technology, both have stated consistently that Iran has no interest in nuclear weapons, and that Islam even forbids the use of such weapons.

Defense ministry officials' talking openly about a nuclear war fighting doctrine turns on its head the long-stated public position of the Islamic Republic that Iran "couldn't possibly want a nuclear weapon because their ideology and the religious rulings of Ayatollah Khomeini prohibited it," says Kenneth Katzman, a former CIA analyst who is the top Iran expert at the Congressional Research Service.

Many U.S. experts have been skeptical of such Iranian disclaimers for years. But these latest Iranian statements give added weight to the view that Iranian officials say one thing in public, while doing exactly the opposite behind closed doors.

Former Assistant Secretary of State Paula DeSutter, who tracked nuclear weapons proliferation and verified arms control treaties with the Russian Federation and others for the Bush administration, believes that these latest Iranian statements “can only mean that Iran would target Israeli or U.S. nuclear facilities, or that it would employ nuclear weapons.”

“This language appears to take Iran from nuclear weapons acquisition planning into nuclear weapons employment doctrine, and is therefore quite serious,” DeSutter told Newsmax.

The article, which appeared at intelligence ministry website alef.ir, carried a blaring headline with a quote from the deputy chairman of Iran’s Joint Chiefs of Staff.

“Iran could get involved in a military conflict in the future,” the vice chief said.

While the deputy chief of the joint staff was not named in the article, a brief item on Iran’s state-run television network in July noted that Ayatollah Khamenei has just named Rear Admiral Saleh as deputy chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff with specific responsibilities for planning and budgetary affairs.

The brief television announcement gave no further information about the new vice chief and in the article last week his quote ran with his title and a picture with a blank face.

The article also states that Iran should be prepared to launch attacks against the continental United States, against economic targets, with the aim of “weakening the morale of the people,” language similar to that used by Osama bin Laden to justify the 9/11 attacks.

The Defense Ministry analysis is not a fiery propaganda document, but rather a measured examination of the real-world environment, and this is why it should be taken so seriously.

Regarding Israel, for example, the author refrains from polemics.

The Islamic Republic authorities “need to examine more closely what war with Israel would mean,” he states. “To do so, we first need to analyze Israel’s military capabilities. Israel has an estimated 200 nuclear warheads, as well as chemical and biological weapons. So if there is a conflict, one must first determine whether it will be a conventional war, or a nuclear war.”

Israel believes that Iran “threatens its existence,” and is therefore worried about Iran’s steadily improving relationships with its neighbors, especially Saudi Arabia and Lebanon, the Iranian Defense Ministry analyst writes.

To counter Iran’s regional influence, “Israel is expanding relations with Russia, Georgia, and some Central Asia states,” he writes. “Iran must keep Israel’s intentions in mind and therefore should pursue friendly cooperation with its neighbors, especially its Arab neighbors, to reduce Israel’s influence in the region.”

The analyst also argues that the United States is over-extended militarily because of its commitments in Iraq and Afghanistan. “The only way the United States could attack Iran would be after a U.S. withdrawal from Iraq,” he states.

“Thus, the more the United States withdraws its forces from Iraq, the greater the chance of a military conflict with Iran.”
